

What would make a great article, in my opinion, is a melding of these three articles that I have written and are available online:

The first explains why the Shroud of Turin was probably created by Gnostics in the 1st or 2nd century using methods that have been lost in history. See "Canonical Complaint Against Cardinal Dolan: Science and the Catholic Church" (<http://www.dkroemer.com>).

The second gives a psychological explanation for why people think the scientific arguments for God's existence make sense. See "Rational Arguments For God's Existence: Evangelizing Is Good and Proselytizing Is Bad" (<http://www.newevangelist.me>).

The third tells about an absurd article about evolutionary biology in a peer-reviewed physics journal. See "Pseudoscience in the American Journal of Physics" (<http://www.pseudoscience123.com>).

I had a two-hour interview with James H. Fetzer on May 16 about these matters. It was his 200th show:
