Assuming that what you sent is an accurate reflection of your exchanges with Dr. Boterbloem, he was very professional in his treatment of you, a courtesy you did not return. If the short piece you provided a link to is the entirety of your article. it seems that you have confused polemic with scholarship, among other issues.

I haven't any notion how I wound up on your email list, but it would be best if you remove my name.

"History is the only laboratory we have in which to test the consequences of thought." Etienne Gilson.
"The first key to wisdom is defined, of course, as frequent and assiduous questioning. " Peter Abelard.
